U.S. News Drops UMich From Top 20 Colleges “Because of Female President”

The U.S. News and World Report updated its college rankings for 2027, and placed University of Michigan below the Top 20 after the appointment of “that broad, what’s her name? The one in charge.”

Critics of the decision noted that it was logically inconsistent, as the last time University leadership had a shred of dignity without being embroiled in a constant series of sex scandals and misconduct allegations was during the tenure of its last female president, Mary Sue Coleman.

“As an organization we have never condoned women at large,” said a representative for U.S. News. “Mary Sue Coleman was the only good one, really just one of the guys. That chick could hang with the best of ‘em. Saw her crush a 22-second keg stand outside of dental frat one year. Beast mode. Wish my bitch wife, who I hate, could do that.”

A PR representative of the U.S. News denied allegations of sexism, pointing out that the paper’s executive editor, Elizabeth Archer, is a woman. “We’re not misogynistic, we just have a set of strong opinions about women and what they can and can’t do,” the paper said.

“We weren’t too happy when they put Domenico Grasso in charge either,” said Archer. “Sounds ethnic, or something. Is he an Italian? We’re the U.S. News, not the ‘European’ Eye-talian News.”

“The old white guy with brain cancer seemed to be a very promising candidate, we were very disappointed that he wasn’t hired,” said the U.S. News in a press statement. “When they decided to go for Cybele Raver instead, it just didn’t feel the same.”

At press time, U.S. News also announced Clemson jumped thirty spots due to their recent selection of Benjamin Ayers as their new president.

U.S. News and World Report promised to reinstate U of M’s position in the Top 20 next year if they ban women from campus entirely.

Kash Patel Hard Launches Consensual Relationship With Victor The Frisbee Dog

Earlier this week, following Kash Patel’s decision to remove bestiality and prostitution as automatic disqualifiers for FBI job applicants this summer, the FBI director hard launched his new, “consensual relationship” with Victor the Frisbee Dog via Instagram.

“I’m the real victor in this relationship,” announced Patel in his post. “I feel so lucky to call this beautiful creature my partner. And I didn’t even have to pay him!”

“We met in the Big House,” Patel continued. “We were pissing on the same patch of turf. I looked over and saw him there, looking so majestic, and... well. It was love at first sight.”

In response to allegations that the relationship’s dynamics were, Patel claimed that Victor “made the first move” by dry-humping his leg.

The announcement was accompanied by a twenty slide photo dump of the happy couple going on long walks, throwing/catching frisbees, sharing a plate of spaghetti at a moonlit dinner, and a couple pictures of Victor’s asshole.

“We just have so much in common,” said Patel in a subsequent White House briefing. “Other than us both being dirty dogs, hahahahaha. I just feel like he gets me, in a way no sapient biped ever could. Whatever souls are made of, his and mine are the same or whatever Emily Bronte said. Now if you’ll excuse me, I need to slather peanut butter on my dick.”

When asked to comment on the relationship, Victor the Frisbee Dog said, “bark bark bark bark. Rrrff. Bark bark.”

At press time, the Michigan Daily’s Editorial Board was reportedly debating whether to endorse or condemn the relationship.

The FBI reported a 38% increase in applications from white women following the announcement.

All White Glee Club Only Doing Kanye Covers

The Proud Boys Band reportedly nailed the weird distorted part from "Runaway."

During their annual fall showcase, Michigan's acapella group, the Proud Boys Band, reportedly bombed on stage after deciding to perform an all-Kanye set, despite only being made up of white performers. Audience members polled after the performance described the set as, "for nobody" and "everything that's wrong with America right now." One such attendee, longtime acapella fan Jessica Liu, described her experience as, "like being on the edge of my seat, but not in a good way." When asked to elaborate, she explained that, "they didn't even pick a 'safe' Kanye song. They were out there performing 'Golddigger' from top to bottom." "Who let them add 'Black Skinhead' to the list?" another attendee, junior Travis Matthews, asked. "And they were doing these skit lead-ins before every song. Everyone in the audience visibly clenched when that one dude started describing his summer trip to Paris." "On top of that," Travis added, "they weren't even like good Kanye covers. Not that I would've overlooked that shit-show either way, but their being bad at singing definitely didn't help." When asked to comment on their set's reception, club president Daniel McVeigh defended their choice, saying, "I don't see what the big deal is. We all individually voted for Kanye as our showcase artist without any prior discussion. And I'll let you in on a secret" he continues, "you could say this isn't the first time I've voted for Kanye." At press time Daniel was seen pitching a full D4vd set for their winter showcase, which was met by a sea of enthusiastic nods.

Kappa Delta Kappa Pledges Placed In Plato's Allegory Of The Cave

Kappa Delta Kappa is facing possible suspension after reports exposed the fraternity's newest hazing method. Pledge Jedd Albright, who wished to remain anonymous, stated that after several rounds of standard frat shenanigans, tomfoolery, and other borderline assault, surviving pledges were made to stay in Plato's allegory of the cave. The hazing involved pledges being chained inside a sewer tunnel near Mitchell Field while KDK actives projected shadow images on the walls. Albright claimed he experienced the full gamut of frat experiences in shadow form, including standing at the door during parties, getting hammered, and cleaning up after said parties while hungover. After several days, Albright began to believe his life in the tunnel was real. "I was getting down and dirty with this grey chick I met the other night right when they showed me the majesty of the real world. I tried to go back and finish, but it just wasn't the same." Several men have reportedly been inside the cave for over a year, forgotten after a series of frat-flicking injuries took priority.

When questioned by authorities, the frat brothers said it was impossible to tell whether the pledges were left in the cave or not until they were observed.

Psychology professor Adriene Beltz was consulted on the best way to manage the psyches of pledges after prolonged exposure. "It would only cause harm if they knew about anything outside of the cave. Really, it would be cruel to remove them now." At press time, the University's fraternal ethics committee has remained undecided on how to proceed for over a week. In the interim, the five young men will stay inside the cave.

The Michigan Every Three Weekly is a newspaper of satire and campus affairs that is not intended for readers under the age of 18 years. The Every Three Weekly uses invented names in its stories except in cases where public figures and prominent University members are being satirized or described. Any other use of real names is accidental and coincidental. The statements and opinions within the Michigan Every Three Weekly are not necessarily the views of its sponsors, UAC, or the University of Michigan.

Baby's first acknowledgement: We of the Honorable Every Three Weekly would like to acknowledge everyone who wrote piss jokes, Sarah Hubbard jokes, dog jokes, and sexist jokes for this issue of the paper. Usually there are more gay jokes but me and Nolan did what we could. This was supposed to become a pornographic newspaper by now, and I do think we are getting closer and closer to that goal every issue so thank you to everyone who is contributing to our cause. I feel like the only person who would read the acknowledgements section is probably like Seamus if he was becoming nostalgic for his glory days as EIC, so thank you Seamus if you read this. Every time I see a bearded man on campus I think it's you. Also Hannah, every time I see a woman I think it's you. Thank you so much to all women. We led with a sexist headline on this issue so hopefully this single acknowledgement makes up for it. Ok I'm done.

Roommate Pisses On Good Side Of Dorm To Claim Territory

Newman says he regrets his behavior now that he knows his roommate is a doormat, another object he has pissed on.

Earlier this month during move-in week, freshman Jacob Collins reported that his roommate in the Wolverine Village residence hall pissed on the “good side” of their shared dormitory room to claim the space for himself.

“I was already dreading moving into college, especially because I went random with my roommate,” said Collins. “But I thought I would be facing more normal problems, like he’s kind of messy and loud at night and turns into a werewolf when there’s a full moon. I could never have foreseen this behavior. However, it’s definitely effective since I haven’t stepped foot on his side of the room since move-in day.”

Collins and his roommate, Animal Physiology major Mark Newman, briefly exchanged text messages over the summer when they found out they were rooming together. Newman allegedly sent messages such as “I love to run around and catch frisbees,” “my favorite food is treats,” and “I’m excited to chase tail at college.”

“Other than the piss thing, he’s not really a bad roommate,” commented Collins. “He’s very friendly, always wants to go on walks with me, and sleeps at the foot of my bed, which is cute. But whenever I go to class, I can tell he just sits by the door waiting for me to come back.”

At press time, Collins put in a request with his RA for a room transfer after Newman chewed up his homework.

Reports Of Conservative Mecca At The Big House Just Confirmed As Morgan Wallen Concert

After weeks of speculation of a conservative Mecca occurring at the Big House this summer, the Religious Research Association has confirmed that it was just the Morgan Wallen concert.

The news comes after Ann Arbor residents reported a mass migration of cowboy boots and MAGA hats throughout the city over the course of two days his shows were taking place. “It was like the music brainwashed them; I never want to see that much cowboy cosplay again,” said non-concertgoer Jillian Wang.

The herds of denim weren’t the only thing inciting theories of a conservative Mecca. Many Ann Arbor residents mistook the music outside of the Big House before the concert for calls to prayer. The Pew Research Center also reported that the Ann Arbor population doubled over the two day course of his concerts, with the demographics going from 66% to 95% white.

Big House staff reported that over half the seats were stained orange from spray tan, and chants of driving big trucks and drinking cold beer on a Friday night were heard all around Ann Arbor as concertgoers departed the Big House. At press time, DTE workers were still moseying on over to restore the outages caused by the surge of Cyber Trucks charging in the city.

Professor Excited To Show Off Picture Of Ridiculously Ugly Children To New Group Of Students

According to recent reports, Dr. Richard Emerson, a tenured professor of History, was “giddy” with anticipation as he prepared to show a fresh crop of students pictures of his unbelievably unattractive children for the 15th straight semester.

“It’s a great way to break the ice,” said Emerson, ignoring the groans of previous classes. “There’s no better way to establish rapport than forcing 200 undergrads to feign enthusiasm over photos of my awkward, toothless 8-year-old in a ‘Minions’ costume.”

Students found themselves subjected to a five-minute slideshow of the Emerson offspring, featuring blurry action shots, bad haircuts, and a disturbing amount of food stains on faces.

Eli Schneider, a GSI for Emerson, is aware of the professor’s cruel antics: “I’ve thought about murdering those kids—just to end it all, you know? But then I remembered their faces would be published in the paper for the obituaries. You just can’t win.”

Sources confirmed that Emerson has already planned to repeat this deeply uncomfortable bonding ritual with every class for the foreseeable future: “I’m just happy that others can see how ugly my gross children are, too.”

New Coca-Cola Fountains In Dining Halls Confident That Water Least Popular Drink

After their newest model, Coca-Cola are working on developing “soda ice” to replace outdated “water ice,” a “glaring oversight” on the part of designers.

As the University of Michigan switches to only serving Coca-Cola products in dining halls across all of its campuses as part of a new exclusive pouring rights agreement, it has become clear that the company believes that water is the least popular beverage by making it the most inconvenient drink to serve yourself from their fountains.

Unlike the previous fountains, which had a whole one or two stations dedicated to water, the new fountains make an individual push a water-labeled lever on either the Blue Powerade or Hi-C Pink Lemonade stations, making sure that students, especially those with only one hand free, consider Coca-Cola’s sugary and carbonated choices first, and that if they do choose water anyway, that it possesses a strong hint of whatever flavor the station it was poured from has.

“A recent study showed that amongst healthy-aged individuals, plain water was found to be less desired than Sprite, Coke, or our other brand-name drinks,” a spokesperson from the company said in a statement about the agreement. “Though, we are required to disclaim the study was funded by every single major corn syrup supplier in the world.”

“Supplier trends are showing our Dasani is significantly unpopular as a water brand, disliked even amongst street dogs,” said the company’s Head of Bottling Macaullay Curran. “We take this as evidence that plain water is ignored when people need to quench their thirst.”

At press time, Coca-Cola fountain servicing technicians across campus were seen installing metering and facial recognition software to limit individuals to three fluid ounces of water per day before requiring a food service worker to dispense it for you, after which the levers are put out-of-order altogether.

Bryce Underwood Announced RB1

Bryce Underwood was recently announced as the University of Michigan's starting running back after displaying his elite running ability over the team's early season games.

"I'm excited to continue pushing my limits and moving the team forward," stated Underwood in a recent press release. "I feel that, given my recent run of form, this is the best decision for us."

"Yeah, he kinda sucks at throwing, but the other teams keep forgetting he can move too, so hell, might as well let him run the football," said head coach Kyle Whittingham when asked about Underwood's decision. "As long as we get that fumbling situation figured out, I think he could be pretty good. That kid has baby-smooth hands. I mean, when you shake his hand, it feels like caressing a hairless cat."

Underwood has also announced his intent to join the University's track team, expressing a desire to "learn more from people with such a similar athletic style to my own."

"I'm excited to see him run," said Kevin Sullivan, the Director of Track and Field, when asked about Bryce's verbal commitment to run track in the spring. "I was surprised he asked to be on the team, but he has some talent. We had him here for a practice, and he has a real chance of representing us in the hundred meter dash, as long as he can figure out that it isn't a hundred yards. He's also a natural at pole vaulting."

At press time, Jordan Marshall started at quarterback over backup Tommy Carr.

Michigan Daily Unfortunately Accepts New Cohort Of Opinion Writers

The Daily's editors have additionally threatened to actually publish their opinion columns if a series of demands are not met.

The Michigan Daily Opinion Section has accepted a cohort of new writers, generating feelings of shock and outrage among campus observers who continue to be baffled that the organization would willingly perpetuate its own existence.

"We at the Daily pride ourselves on producing opinion articles that ragebait hundreds of people and boost engagement in our Instagram comments section," said opinion editor Elanor Newman. "I'm proud to announce that our new writers will keep that tradition alive for many years to come."

While many of the section's new writers have said they plan to write reasonable if somewhat unoriginal and uninspired columns, the Daily's opinion editors have gone to great lengths to ensure that the section will always be able to publish an article that lands on the wrong side of history for any given issue, whether local, national, contemporary, or long buried by the sands of time.

"We were really impressed by one guy who passionately argued in favor of putting down Victor the Frisbee Dog," opinion editor George Engels said. "I'm a moderate Victor-hater myself and just want to see him sent to the pound, but this trial column really opened my eyes to what might be possible."

The Daily's new columnists have set themselves hard at work drafting ideas to provoke deep thought and discussion on campus. Notable pitches thus far included "Why Income Inequality Should Be Higher," "The Case For Pissing And Shitting Yourself," "Justice for Israeli National Security Minister Itamar Ben-Gvir," and "Why The Reaction To That Lesbian Bar in Massachusetts Was Totally Valid, Actually."

Doctor Didn't Even Ask If You Have Any STDs

Doctor Preeti Shah "didn't even ask" if longtime patient Venkat Viswanathan had STDs when he went in for his annual checkup this year, according to the dismayed college student.

"I didn't feel the need to discuss that with Venkat," said Shah. "It seemed like the sort of thing that wouldn't be a concern for him, and frankly it's icky."

"I was going to leave, and then I realized this visit didn't feel nearly as uncomfortable as my last one," said Viswanathan. "I asked if they had forgotten anything, and they just said 'no, we didn't forget.'"

"I only realized later when a friend asked me if my tests came back all good that they had missed the sex talk," said Viswanathan. "That's when I realized I could be out here contracting and spreading hundreds or possibly thousands of hypothetical STDs that the medical community would know nothing about. It was an act of negligence I would never expect from Dr. Shah, who I consider one of my closest personal friends and confidants."

"STDs?" said John Kim, a friend of Viswanathan. "Why would I ask Venkat about STDs? He wouldn't know a condom from a party balloon. I was asking him about physics. Now I feel bad for making him all worried about something that's never going to happen"

To defend her potentially negligent behavior, Shah said "Look, I've known Venkat since he was a kid. We all see what he's working with; it's a small gown and well ventilated room. I don't foresee any issues in the near future. And no, that's not HIPPA, anyone with eyeballs could figure that out for themself."

Viswanathan, the first student to get an exemption from the University sexual wellness courses, chalks it up to a misunderstanding.

Dad Finally Says He's Proud Of You In LinkedIn Comments

Reports indicate that, for the first time in junior Josh Morgan's life, his father stated he was proud of him, using the popular professional networking application LinkedIn.

"I've never been so happy," said Morgan, with tears in his eyes. "I made a post about my B2B client identification SaaS website I vibe coded with Grok bot, and he commented 'prd of u son.' He even reposted it!

I printed out the screenshot and hung it up on the fridge. I was so happy. This is even better than the time that my dad said my data consulting role was 'cool,' or when he said my college acceptance letter was 'nice.' It sucks that I'm in college now, though, because I can't talk to him in person. I guess I'll just have to keep texting him over LinkedIn like normal."

"It was a high-impact career-building project," said Morgan's father about his project. "It provides a strong springboard to accelerate his professional network. With a bit more refinement in his executive communication, he'll be well-positioned to expand to 500+ connections and land a role at a top firm like McKinsey, like me. I just really want him to achieve workplace synergy one day."

Morgan's LinkedIn connections rapidly dropped in number following the interaction. Several high-profile tech CEOs were reportedly "disgusted" by this show of fatherly love, and wished to keep LinkedIn as a "sterile" digital wasteland free of positive emotion.

At press time, Morgan uploaded his texting history with his dad to an AI chatbot in order to emulate realistic praise.

Morgan's father later commented "how to open pdf in email googel".

Taubman Now Offering Hostile Architecture Course

ARCHITECTURE & URBAN PLANNING

Arch 388, Hostile Architecture

Term: Fall 2026
Section: 1
Class Number: 27901
Credits: 3
Required: Yes
Elective: No
Meets: Thurs 2:00-4:00pm 2104 A&AB Thurs 4:00-5:00pm 1260 A&AB

Students in ARCH 388 are encouraged to explore the boundary between architecture and medieval torture devices in their designs.

The Taubman College of Architecture and Urban Planning has recently announced the opening of enrollment for ARCH 388: "Hostile Design," a 3-credit elective course. The curriculum includes an independent project where students are tasked with proposing a "differently accommodating" alternative to traditional street furniture.

Second-year Taubman student Jacob McCornice said he was excited to take the new course. "I have so many ideas already," he explained. "I want to start by adding large spikes on hospital benches and bike racks. Maybe we could also distribute some spikes throughout the grass on the Diag, so people can't loiter around on their little picnic blankets. I think it would be good to remove the roof and benches from the CCTC as well. We could keep the armrests from the benches and just take the seats out."

"It's great to see that students are really focused on inclusivity, which was our goal," stated Dr. Laura Brute, faculty member and proponent of the course. "One of our students suggested adding more single-stall restrooms around campus, with an option to pay to lock the door, and a few extra dollars to use the wheelchair ramp. She also suggested giving 0.001% of the proceeds to a gender inclusive charity. That's a wonderful idea."

At press time, landscapers were spotted replacing all campus grass with cacti.

Wealthy Roommate Thinks Lightbulbs Grow From Socket

Last Sunday, sophomore Carsile McGillicuddy was alarmed to discover that lightbulbs do not, in fact, grow from their sockets.

"I share a bathroom with Carlisle, and one of the lightbulbs died on our light fixture the other day," said Ryan Lewis, McGillicuddy's roommate. "I asked him super casually if he could buy a new one the next time he went out, and he just stared at me, totally confused. He asked if I 'knew how lightbulbs were born?' I didn't really know what to say to that."

Lewis discovered that McGillicuddy believed that lightbulbs grew directly from the socket after the old ones died.

"He said that the old light bulb leaves a seed, and a new one comes in and replaces it overnight. Me and the other housemates sometimes forget that he's super loaded, and then something like this will happen to remind us."

College is the first time in McGillicuddy's life where he has not been attended to by a host of staff, including (but not limited to) a driver, chef, butler, and jester. McGillicuddy brought the entourage to his dorm freshman year, but was dissuaded against doing so again by his housemates.

McGillicuddy was also surprised to learn that toilet paper and paper towels do not generate naturally, either. "He assumed that, whenever the roll was empty, new product grew right on it," says Lewis. "I guess that explains why he gets really confused when I recycle old toilet paper rolls."

At press time, McGillicuddy was seen putting fertilizer into the home's silverware cabinet in order to "promote spoon growth."

Regent Hubbard Devours Student's Soul

Students on campus report seeing University of Michigan Regent Sarah Hubbard unhinging her jaw and draining an unnamed student of her vital essence outside of Mason Hall Friday evening.

"It was easily one of the most distressing things I've ever had the extreme displeasure of witnessing," said onlooker Ryan Barnes, LSA '29. "And I've used the bathrooms at Markley. She just popped out of the bushes and grabbed that girl, quicker than anyone could react, and sucked some kind of weird green pearlescent mist out of her face. I wanted to intervene, but Panera closed in, like, five minutes, and I was really hungry. Papa needs his soup."

The University issued an official response a few days after the incident, prompted by mounting pressure from the U of M community. "The University of Michigan is aware of a reported event involving Regent Sarah Hubbard and an undergraduate student. While we understand many have concerns about Regent Hubbard's actions, the diets and lifestyle choices of our Regents are ultimately not for the University to decide. Sarah Hubbard has been an integral part of maintaining our values of political repression and genocide complicity, and one or two desouled students will not change that. We look forward to supplying her with a source of precious youthful vitality in the future."

At press time, Regent Hubbard was spotted scavenging downtown Ann Arbor for unattended newborns to drain even more potent life essence from.

Wolverine Village Orgy Rescheduled Due To Religious Complaints

Organizers were spotted inquiring religious leaders at Hillel about which day of the High Holidays would be "least disrespectful" to hold the sex party on.

The dorm-wide orgy in the newly-constructed Wolverine Village has been pushed back from November 1st to November 17th after repeated objections. Residents of Wolverine Village, or The Village People, have built a reputation as some of the most depraved and perverted people on campus. To align with the deviants' interests, a community-bonding orgy was scheduled the day after Halloween. Organizers said the original date "was meant to continue the spooky celebrations, but also fell on one of those random Google Calendar holidays: All Saints' Day."

A religious university group, the Young Men's Christian Association, petitioned in the Diag to cancel the event, handing out fliers and organizing chants like "Don't lick taints on the day of saints!" The pressure from the group reached a breaking point last Tuesday, when a prayer vigil followed by a prayer riot took place outside of the Union. Several spectators described the riot as "violent and honestly kind of erotic itself."

Wolverine Village resident advisors begrudgingly rescheduled the event. RA Loretta Spitt explained, "We spent months planning this. We bought snacks, rented condoms and rooms. We spent over $300 on lube alone!" However, not all Wolverine Village inhabitants were unhappy with the change. Young Men's Christian Association member Ezekiel Jonah said, "I don't regret missing out on the orgy, the only thing I need inside me is the Lord. After all, it's fun to stay at the Y.M.C.A."

At press time, Bursley dwellers announce a companion jack-off alone event in solidarity.

Regents Announce Plan To Install Flock Cameras Inside Your Asshole

The Regents of the University of Michigan have announced a new plan to enhance campus security: installing flock cameras inside the rectum of every student, professor, and worker on campus.

"By collecting scans of your colon and the surrounding area, we can provide all students with a more enriching and orderly campus experience," said university president Domenico Grasso. "We are especially concerned about the safety of students who attend protests, and will make sure to watch them extra closely for their own benefit."

"You can never be too vigilant when looking for protesters, especially if they're talking about divestment," said regent Jordan Acker. "Every single day I wake up in a cold sweat, worried they've dug their way up there. Doctors tell me that's just the inoperable stick up my ass, but I'm pretty sure they're wrong."

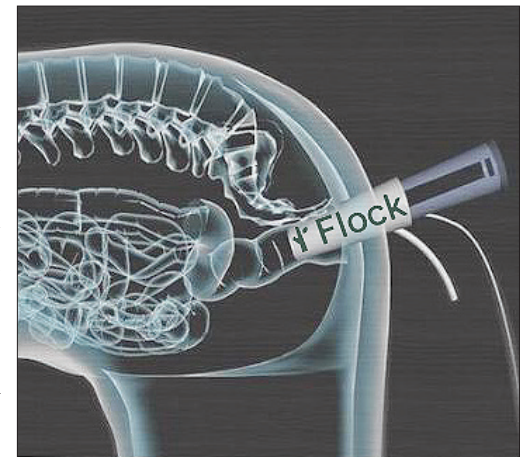

Many have complained about the installation process, which according to the University's announcement entails the camera crawling up your ass "like that one bug robot from the first Matrix movie," but the regents have assured campus that the changes will be minimal.

"You all barely muttered a complaint when we were stalking people with plainclothes security officers," said regent Sarah Hubbard. "I'm sure students will get used to this within a semester."

While most of campus opposes the move, a pro-flock group called Students Supporting Installation has popped up to support it, flyering, holding speaking events, and throwing a "panopticon-themed" rave to "clear the FOG of misinformation surrounding anal flock cameras."

At press time, the vast majority of people were doing absolutely nothing.

Regent Sarah Hubbard has been preparing to personally get "down and dirty."

N. University Construction Unearths Centuries-Old Troll

Last week, a strange, troll-like creature was accidentally excavated by a work crew during road construction on North University. The troll had apparently been buried long before the university was established, and upon his release was alarmed by current campus culture.

"Humans so hard to predict," he muttered. "Back in troll's day, when troll asked travellers many riddles, they get riddle right or I drown them. Nobody say stupid thing like 'can I Grok it?' or 'I don't think you're allowed to say that word.'"

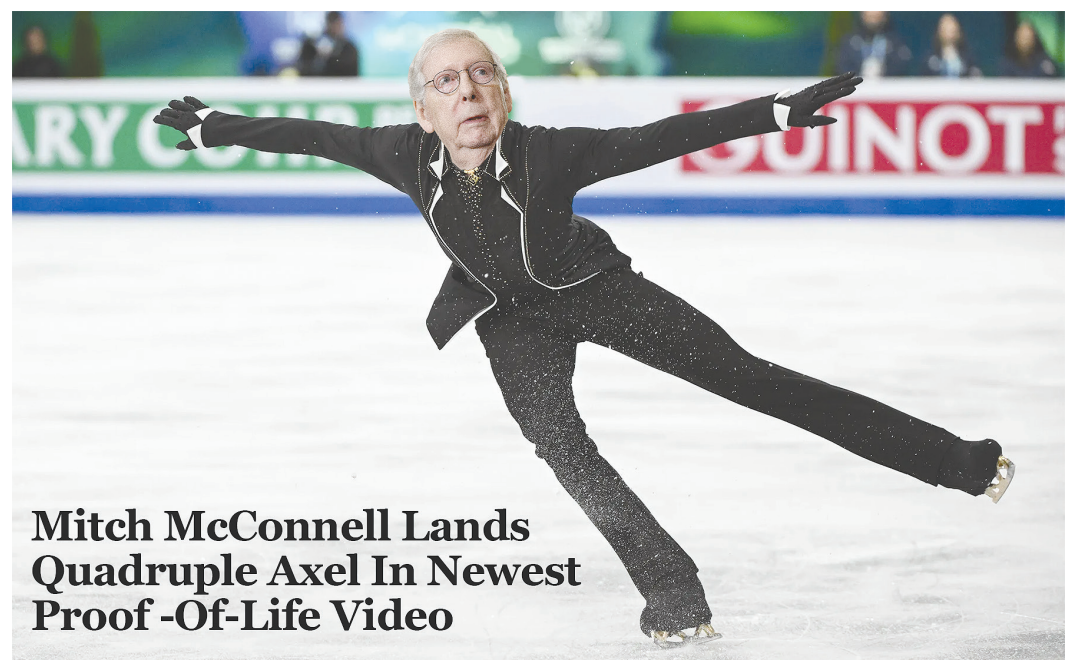

"The humans spend their new paper money in many very odd way, also," he added. "I see a person buy a single beverage for nine papers. I used to get entire keg of finest grog at the forest's tavern only for half piece of silver."

The troll, in an effort to integrate himself to the modern day, spent a day attending a university class and going to a local party. "Class about human health, if I recall," he reflected. "But diagrams missing little white bone in every human right ear. I was confused — most of the humans didn't seem to be paying attention. They doing things on those little colorful rectangles instead. They have big rectangles as well as small one. There must be something important going on in there. Think it is mirror of greatest fear."

"Now party... that was very frightening," continued the troll. "Humans drink jungle juice like great jungle troll. And all of the 'music artists,' they all very angry about something, like great jungle troll."

At press time, the troll was seen using a rectangle and trying to comprehend the mechanics and ethics of DoorDash.

Eastern Michigan University Begins Construction Of Retaliatory Data Center In Ann Arbor

Overwhelmed with gratitude, Eastern Michigan University has begun construction of a data center in Ann Arbor, hoping to repay the favor that the University of Michigan has done for Ypsilanti through its plans to build one in the surrounding township.

"We just felt like it was the thing to do," said Dr Brendan Kelly, EMU president. "We've been so thankful for all of the benefits U of M says they're going to bring to our community, and we just wanted to repay the favor in the spirit of friendship."

After a long and rigorous process of site selection, EMU chose to build the data center on an economically unproductive and overgrown part of the city commonly known as "The Arb." The reception has been overwhelmingly positive according to EMU, though a small number of confused individuals who thought they opposed the decision were kindly escorted by police to therapeutic grey concrete boxes and locked behind iron bars.

"I think this is a wonderful idea," said Chris Michaels of the Ypsilanti Business Association. "Ann Arbor is a severely economically depressed area, the entire place is basically dependent on U of M to survive. The EMU data center will fix this issue by creating months of temporary construction work, and three whole remote jobs."

The data center has received support from a wide array of respected individuals and institutions, including DTE Energy and governor Whitmer, who is "just happy they're having fun building them down there." The Ann Arbor District Library has excitedly offered up its entire catalogue of books to be burned as fuel for the servers.

At press time, EMU reported being bombarded with partnership offers from Palantir and Raytheon, who hope to agree on a similar partnership to that of U of M's with Los Alamos.

Abdul El-Sayed Surges In Polls After Getting Tighter T-Shirt

Michigan candidate for Senate Abdul El-Sayed recently saw a gain of 17 points on average in polling after unveiling a tighter T-shirt at a town hall event in Ann Arbor last Wednesday.

The event most likely centered on healthcare policy, affordability, and money in politics, however nobody interviewed could recall precisely what El-Sayed spoke about. Attendee Sara Gorter said El-Sayed "talked about something, for sure." Another attendee, Andrew Laudens, claimed he was "mainly focused on the gestures because, of course, you can tell a lot about a politician from their body... uh, um, that is, their body language."

Sources inside El-Sayed's office said the candidate has also considered changes to other elements of his wardrobe, including "skinnier jeans" and "way, way shorter shorts," as well as "those shoes where each toe gets its own individual enclosed part of the shoe, like gloves except they go on your feet. Y'know, for the freaks."

A focus group indicated that the candidate could improve his margins even more by filming campaign ads in his home gym.

El-Sayed's opponent, Mike Rogers, criticized the move as a "cheap attention grab trying to distract from the real issues, like transgender children and adults who are transgender." Rogers, however, appeared at his next campaign event in Palm Beach, Florida wearing a men's small white T-shirt and cutoff jean shorts. He claimed to have "owned [them] for years" despite the tag sticking out of his waistband.

Witnesses described Rogers' appearance at the event as "a seriously revolting carnival of wrinkled, mottled, sweat-oozing flesh" and "on par with the very most stomach-churning of eldritch horrors... so utterly outside comprehension that to look upon it for even a moment risks shredding the mind beyond all hope of repair."

At press time, analysts predicted that El-Sayed could win in a historic landslide if he went permanently shirtless.

Girl Accidentally Has Yuri Summer Instead Of Euro Summer

This August, local woman Touko Nanami had planned to go on a backpacking trip across Europe, but accidentally ended up having a life-changing sapphic experience instead.

Nanami reported that her childhood best friend, Yuu Koito, invited her on a "Yuri summer" trip, which Nanami misheard as "Euro summer."

"I really wanted to go on this whole Europe trip to explore and 'find myself,'" said Nanami. "I guess I still did a lot of exploring and I definitely found things out about myself that I didn't know before."

When Nanami reached France and reunited with Koito in their romantic shared hotel room, Koito reportedly greeted her with a kiss on the mouth. "Oh yeah, they kinda just do that here, right?" said Nanami. "Like French kissing and stuff. We were just partaking in the culture, and that's what Euro summer is all about!"

Next, on their trip to Greece, they visited the Island of Lesbos. "I felt really at home there, like I had really found my people," said Nanami. She and Koito also went to Sweden, where they lounged naked in the women's sauna together, and Bulgaria, where they participated in a traditional dance known as "Bulgarian Scissoring."

"When we were in Germany, Koito kept asking people where she could buy a 'strapon' which I'm assuming is one of those really specific German words," added Nanami.

Though Nanami enjoyed her brief, enlightening journey in Europe, she decided to "go on hiatus" from lesbianism and got back with her ex-boyfriend.

Following “Lake America” Renaming, Trump Renames White House To “White America”

The new White America is to feature “purely decorative” gallows on the front lawn, adjacent to the now permanent MMA arena.

Following executive orders purporting to rename the Gulf of Mexico to “the Gulf of America” and Lake Ontario to “Lake America,” President Trump has continued by declaring that the White House is now the “White America.”

“You’d think the place where America lives would have had a more patriotic name,” Trump said. “When it’s just called the ‘White House’ how are people supposed to know it’s where I rule America from? But now that’s fixed, thanks to Trump. Besides, I’ve always wanted to live in a white America,” Trump said.

Critics have called the move “stupid” and “incredibly stupid,” adding “do we even need to explain how it’s also racist?”

Historian William K Prouth said, “Why are you even asking me about this? You don’t need an expert to know this is just a silly distraction from the cost of living and blatant authoritarianism. One thing though, and yeah, I know it’s not worth getting worked up over, and I feel stupid even pointing this out, but how does it make any sense to change the ‘house’ part? Wouldn’t it be ‘America House’ if you wanted to change it? I mean seriously, how can you be this God damned stupid... shit, the distraction is working on me.”

At press time, Trump announced that the Library of Congress would now be known as the “Library of America,” which critics said was “actually kind of a lateral move which doesn’t make much of a difference. Harmless, for once.”

Lemonade Recalled, 80% Human Urine Content Up From Usual 45%

United States Secretary of Health and Human Services, Robert F. Kennedy Jr., recently announced a nationwide recall on several lemonade brands, as their human urine content has been found to be roughly 80%, drastically higher than the standard approved 45%.

This recall comes shortly after cutbacks to federal regulation of lemonade, orange juice, and other fruit-based beverages. According to Kennedy, the regulations were loosened to “give freedom to our American factories, support American farmers, and drink no more and no less than 45% American piss.”

“The lemon crop is thriving this year, of course,” says lemonade factory worker Carl Wilkins while unzipping his fly. “It’s not a problem of supply, but more so that it’s just so damn fun to piss on these lemons,” he continues, while urinating onto a conveyor belt carrying hundreds of lemons towards a juicer. “We used to have someone who would make sure that we wouldn’t go over our union mandated piss-to-lemon ratio, but Kennedy cut that guy’s paycheck to fund his next skin-wrinkling procedure.”

When pressed on the issue, Kennedy delivered a contradictory response.

The amount of diarrhea in chocolate-flavored protein shakes has also reportedly increased by a substantial amount.

“Americans are healthier than they’ve ever been,” said Kennedy while spitting up a glowing substance, “and a little bit of piss isn’t gonna change that. I, for one, like the urine. It’s like peeing on a jellyfish sting, except the sting is your stomach. The ancient Chinese believed that the urine of a young boy could stave off several maladies. On that note, let’s continue doing what we’re doing.”

At press time, Kennedy was seen curling into a ball in an attempt to taste his own urine.

FDA Makes Statement: “Just Assume It Has Parasites”

Last Saturday, the Food and Drug Administration announced there are too many foods infected with bacteria, viruses, parasites, and mites to keep track of.

After rampant funding and regulation cuts, the agency is operating with three employees on a quarter of its usual budget. This has coincided with a sharp increase in diseases the FDA was apparently previously holding back for years. The FDA website has replaced all entries on its Recalls, Market Withdrawals, & Safety Alerts page with “~_(\‘\`)_/-”, and the Recommendations section with “Good Luck.”

The announcement was also accompanied by a list of foods to avoid indefinitely, created just before the shutdown: lettuce, celery, pork, chicken, kumquats, eggs, dolphin-safe tuna, dolphin-dangerous tuna, seaweed, humuhumunukunukuapua, the Five Guys fries at the bottom of the bag, marshmallows, oysters, Rocky Mountain oysters, shrimp-fried rice, beef, peas, Flamin’ Hot Cheetos, coconuts, muffins, Bertie Bott’s Every-Flavour Beans, wheat products, and cheese.

The list of unsafe foods has caused a panic among the populace, especially anti-vax parents who ban their children from seed oil. Health Secretary Robert F. Kennedy Jr. objected, “Eating has always been a risk. I can’t tell you the number of times I’ve been near death after eating roadkill on the side of the highway.” Mike “The MyPillow Guy” Lindell, who has claimed he is totally unassociated with RFK Jr, recommended a daily dose of ivermectin on Twitter, saying, “Fuck it, if it can cure COVID, it can do other things too, some of them probably good.”

At press time, grocery prices have increased 50%.

John Fetterman Refuses To Talk With Wife: “She’s Done Nothing for Israel”

John Fetterman’s office announced on Tuesday that the Senator from Pennsylvania, who staunchly supports the State of Israel and its foreign policy objectives, will be stopping all personal and senatorial responsibilities that do not directly support the state and its Middle East conflicts, including those relating to communicating with Gisele Fetterman, his spouse of 18 years.

“She’s done nothing for Israel,” the announcement read. “There’s nothing I care more for than Israel, and so I have decided to drop any and all obligations to meet with people who aren’t already helping me advance their mission, which includes Gisele. My office will be contacting her to inform of this decision, as me directly speaking with her is now a non-starter.”

The announcement came after the Wall Street Journal published an expose on Fetterman, detailing purposefully missing meetings with the Children’s Hospital of Pennsylvania, disabled veterans, state lawmakers, and many other constituents because he had no motivation to meet with any of them.

Itamar Ben-Gvir, Israel’s Minister of National Security, publicly thanked Fetterman for stopping his engagement with his wife, and invited him to come to Tel Aviv and personally press the button to launch new missiles into Gaza.

“You can choose any target coordinates you want,” Ben-Gvir’s post read. “It doesn’t matter if the missiles don’t kill any Hamas members.”

At press time, Fetterman was seen skipping his son’s high school graduation due to anger over his class raising donations for the Children’s Hospital of Pennsylvania instead of AIPAC.

Woman Has Inside-Of-Body Experience During Sober Night Out

At the end of the night, Wilson “whited-out,” and remembered the events in vivid detail.

This past weekend, local woman and borderline alcoholic Sarah Wilson reportedly underwent an “inside-of-body” experience when she visited a club whilst sober.

Last Thursday, Wilson decided to go out with her friends to celebrate the conclusion of a successful 15-day bender. “I knew I still had to honor this huge milestone by hitting the town,” said Wilson. “But it seems that every time I drink, I end up vowing to ‘never drink again’ or whatever. So this time I thought I’ll actually try that out at least one time and see how it goes.”

Wilson reported that the unsettling feelings of mindfulness began to hit her during the pregame at her apartment. As her friends took shots and lip-synced to music videos, instead Wilson commented on the misogyny illustrated in these videos, which she was noticing for the first time.

When the group finally reached their local bar an hour and a half later than they had planned to, Wilson was overcome with consciousness. “I just felt very present and in-the-moment. But, like, in a bad way,” concluded Wilson. “I feel a lot more at peace when I’m wasted.”

Witnesses of this episode report Wilson saying unusual and erratic things like, “Shit, I have a problem set due tomorrow,” “I have this urge to discuss local politics with you,” and “I haven’t called my mom in two weeks, I should check up on her.”

At press time, Wilson’s friends were seen holding an intervention to implore her to stop going out sober.

New World Order Deciding Next Trendy Small Animal Behind Pygmy Hippos And Capybaras

After the New World Order’s previous success with diverting people from realizing their worsening personal conditions, loss of autonomy, and population reduction techniques using cute little animals like capybaras and pygmy hippos like Moo Deng, the leaked internal messages show an evidently evil society plotting out their next social media trend hijack.

“Muhahahahahaha,” one leaked message began. “We exist and are evil and everywhere. People should fear us! Next up on our agenda. Deciding what tiny animal we can rampantly push on Instagram to keep people preoccupied from our global surveillance.”

The leaked list of animals that the society plans for social media users to discover exist and become newly obsessed with includes quokkas, pikas, pudus, and jerboas, with wallabies aimed to hit the mainstream right when NATO and the World Economic Forum announce the formation of one universal currency.

“If people see even one of these animals appear on their feed, they’ll stop researching our takeover of global institutions and immediately go to sharing posts featuring a cute animal with a weird-looking name they just discovered. Muhahahahahaha!” said another of the group’s messages.

At press time, an investigation was taking place to see if the New World Order’s leaked messages were actually a fake release by conspiracy theorists attempting to actualize their assumptions about there being a secretive globalist society controlling every single trend and narrative.

Grandparents Age Gap Okay Now

After their “whatevereth” anniversary, beloved local couple Gram and Gramp Sue and Joseph Lee’s age gap is “okay now.”

“We met in the summer of oh it had to be, ‘43, or ‘54, or ‘52,” said Sue. “He looked so good in his uniform, and his presence, just commanding.”

Joseph was captivated from the start.

“She was this perfect cherry blossom of a girl,” said Joseph. “Stopped me dead in my tracks, right in the middle of our exercises, so I went and asked if she’d go dancing with me. She said that it was a school night, and she would have to ask her folks, but I said I didn’t think her parents would mind much, and that she should just come out with me no harm in it. One thing led to another and now we’ve been married 70 years, can you believe it? Still that beautiful girl I saw out there in the playground.”

There were hardships early on, but things eventually settled as the couple aged out of their obvious differences.

“When I first brought her back to the States people would look at us funny,” said Joseph. “Interracial marriage was still taboo at that time, but people have gotten used to it.”

Joseph fondly recalls getting down on one knee to look Sue in the eye when he proposed.

“I remember trying to get a credit card, and needing Joseph to cosign it, it was humiliating,” said Sue. “I mean I was only 16 at the time, so it wasn’t like it was racist or sexist, but still.”

In their years of happy marriage they’ve experienced a lot of new things together.

“Joseph was the first guy to give me cooties,” said Sue. “And every time I lost a tooth he would sneak into my room in my parents house and put money under my pillowcase. He’s always been such a gentleman.”

Area Mom Mistakes Guantanamo Bay For Cool-Sounding Waterpark

Local mother of two, Lindsay Jones, showed disappointment that her “exotic” weekend getaway to Guantanamo Bay fell short of expectations.

In a heartfelt Facebook post from Friday morning, Jones expressed her excitement at the upcoming family trip. “My twins are so excited for this weekend. I heard the Bay is always so crowded that it’s really hard to find somewhere to stay, but we had no problem booking lodging in their camp. And they even have waterboarding! Susie and I went shopping yesterday for new arm floaties. She’s getting so big!”

No further communication was heard from Jones on Saturday, with family and friends commenting on Friday’s post to ask about the accommodations and the family’s waterboarding adventures.

Jones returned to Facebook with a video update on Sunday afternoon, visibly shaken. “Well, guys, that was a doozy,” she said to the camera with a sigh. “I don’t think they had waterslides. Maybe they were behind the big spiky fence, but we weren’t able to get back there. Anyway, glass half full, right? At least Johnny and his dad got free haircuts. And they even gave Susie a free souvenir! It looks kind of a mini version of a double innertube, but it’s made of metal. She loves it so much, it’s like I can’t take it off her hands!”

In following weeks, an increase in voluntary enrollment at Guantanamo Bay has left experts puzzled. Recent Tripadvisor reviews remain largely positive, with guests citing “free meals” and “limited outside time” as visitor benefits.

Trump Begins Molting Phase, Discards Rotting Skin Shell

Following months of visual degradation, United States President Donald Trump announced Tuesday that he would begin shedding the dead and decaying husk of his former flesh as the next step of his life cycle.

“The CORRUPT COMMIE MEDIA has been very nasty to me lately, claiming that my vile, sagging, and discolored skin is a sign of poor health,” the President said in a post on Truth Social. “SAD!!! Mark Thompson is the CEO of CNN. He is a NASTY, UGLY MAN who’s JEALOUS of the fact that I’ll soon have elegant, beautiful wings and an Adonis-like body. If you ignore the interference from the Cheating Dems I won all 50 states BIG in 2024, and after I finish my nauseating and profane pupation WE’LL WIN THEM AGAIN!!! - President DJT” controversy at a recent press conference. “The President has been hard at work repairing the ruined economy left by the corrupt Biden administration and winning big in Iran, all while dealing with the discomfort caused by his own skin slowly sloughing off in rancid chunks. Frankly, it’s immature and shameful to suggest that the constant smell of pus and other bodily fluids radiating from President Trump could point to any underlying health issues, rather than a glorious process of rebirth into an even stronger leader,” he added.

Vice President J.D. Vance addressed the media

Shortly after the statement, Vance was spotted moistening paper pulp with his own saliva and sculpting it into a hollow cocoon in the Oval Office for the President to crawl into, in which his internal organs will liquify and reform over the course of several months.

Cinephile Still Hasn’t Completed Journey Home From “The Odyssey” IMAX Screening

Lysse’s journey home has been criticized for a perceived lack of faithfulness to the source material.

On the film’s highly anticipated opening weekend, enthusiastic cinephile Hugh Lysse made the trip to Michigan’s only 70mm IMAX theater in Grand Rapids to see Christopher Nolan’s ‘The Odyssey.’ His family has seen no sign of him since, even months later.

Police are tracking Lysse based on scattered eyewitness reports. Some sources say that several other audience members were drowned shortly after the screening due to a flood from the adjacent 4DX theater. Most recently, he was apparently seen attempting to navigate in-between Lansing and Jackson. According to legend, a traveler could potentially survive the trip through either city, but crossing Route 127 spells certain doom.

Lysse’s girlfriend and roommate, Penny LaMay, has been left distraught by his absence. “He was the only one who could open the pickle jars we always get,” LaMay explains through sobs. “So, since he’s been gone for two months, I’ve started matching with every guy I see on Hinge. If one of them can open the jar, I’ll have no choice but to take a new boyfriend.”

“It was one hell of a movie, though,” says Lysse’s friend Andrew Megnon, who attended the screening with him and successfully returned home only one hour after the film. “We actually couldn’t get our hands on tickets in time, so Hugh had this brilliant idea to hide all of us in a popcorn cart and pretend to be an employee. One of our buddies drowned in the butter, but it was totally worth. Personally, I would trust Hugh with my life, and me and the boys will make sure his story is told for generations.”

At press time, Lysse was found blasting music in his car to drown out the tempting call of the police sirens luring him to dangerous waters in Flint.

Stop Asking What We Do With Our Holes

By Artisanal Donut Shop

Hey there! I see you're here to purchase a delicious donut. Go ahead and look at this case over here. At the left end you've got your classic savory donuts: chive chicken salad, bacon bits, and seafood boil. Then over here on the right you'll see our patented sweet donuts. You've got passionfruit smoothie, bubble gu—what was that? You'd like a 'donut hole?' Oh, I fucking bet you would, you sick pervert. It's none of your business what we do with our holes. God knows we don't glaze them and sell them to you people like those disgusting chain donut shops. Why do our donuts even have holes then? Uh, I don't know, why are you a fucking moron? Our shop is dedicated to selling only the finest artisanal donuts this town has to offer. For a reasonable fifteen dollars a piece, no less. We're not interested in pandering to the beggars who can only afford holes. Go ahead and take your broke ass down to the Dunkin' down the street. Well I think you're the one being rude. I bet it's just eating at you to know what we do with all those punched out pieces of dough, huh. What answer would even satisfy little your pea-brain? We plant them out back, so that we can sprout more donut-trees. Or, or, we use them as currency for our employees. Yeah, you better go! Don't let the door hit you on the way out.

Good Morning Beautiful

By Construction Worker Outside Your Window

Wake up, sunshine! You're so cute when you're asleep, y'know. Thought you'd never see someone outside your window because you live on the 14th floor? Haha, yeah, I bet you did. I hope clanging metal pipes together and breaking cinderblocks with a jackhammer at 4am wasn't too harsh an alarm for you. Anyways, thought I'd just say hi while I take a smoke break and stare listlessly into your apartment. Say, you've got a pretty nice spot in there. Love the Pulp Fiction poster. Would it be cool if I came inside? I need a microwave to heat up my leftover burrito bowl once I'm done laying pipe up here.

What's that? Is your microwave broken? Well, good news for you, bucko! I have a lot of experience fixing stuff! Let me take a looksie. Ok wait. I actually dropped my screwdriver through your open window. Can I please come in? Pretty, pretty please? I can have the crane carry me over. Look, we need somewhere to put the jackhammer anyway. Please? It's hard work laying pipe and drilling all day. You know what? It's fine. Whatever. We'll just leave the jackhammer in the shipping container. It's fine. I'm not mad.

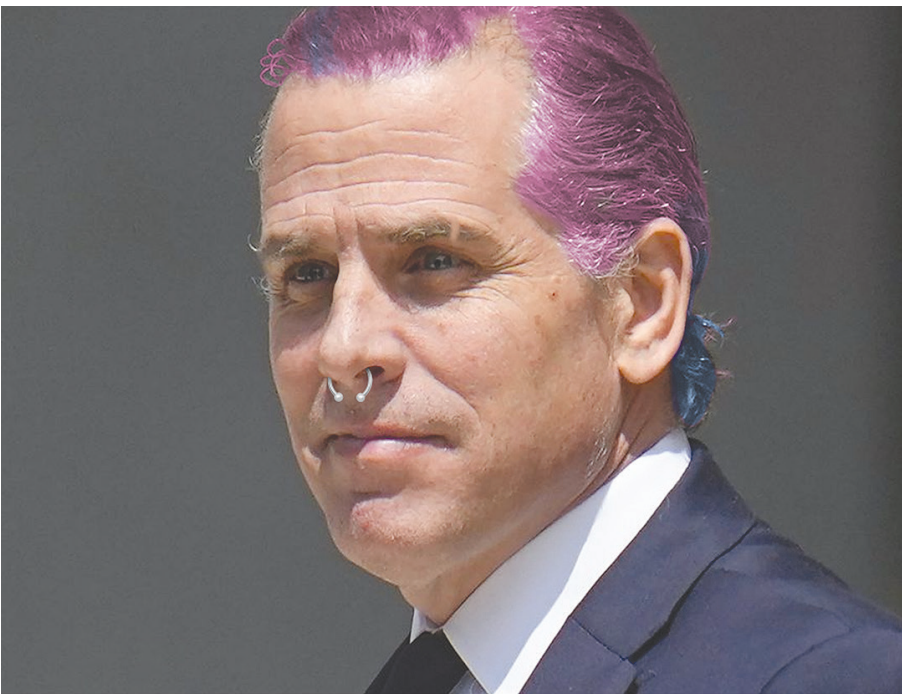

Thank God.

By Domenico Grasso

Ohhhhhh my GODDDDDDD, FINALLY. Jesus CHRIST. Words could not possibly express how much I hate this school. Do you think I wanted to be here all this time? "Uhhh duhhh buhhh then why'd you take the job?" Because I didn't expect to be here for 18 months straight. I really, truly thought when they picked that Syverud schmuck that this nightmare might be over; that I might get to leave this shithole and go back to coasting on a hefty salary and practical anonymity. But no. NO. He just HAD to go and get brain cancer, the selfish bastard. So I had to spend another half a year listening to you all bitch and whine at me. "Ohhhh please increase our funding!" "Ohhhhhh do something to protect international and undocumented students!" Christ ALIVE, I do not CAAAARREEE. Are you people genuinely this gullible? This university doesn't exist for higher education, and it certainly doesn't exist to help any of you. It's a glorified hedge fund, and I got stuck with the job of managing it all while still pretending I care about any of this shit. It's done. I'm done. They've locked in whichever poor sunnovabitch they could con into taking this role, and I've only got two more months before I get to leave. I'm clocking out early. My assistant set up my inbox to automatically delete any incoming mail sent my way, and I've got a straw dummy sitting at my desk if anyone tries to reach me in person. If the Regents try to drag me back in here I'm carrying a loaded revolver, and with God as my witness I'll end it all before I spend a second longer in that office than I am contractually obligated to. I'll see you all in hell. Go Blue.
